

Congress: You Can End the AIDS Epidemic

Investments in the International Affairs budget are critical for the health and safety of families and communities around the world, like those affected by HIV/AIDS. We are at crossroads in the fight against AIDS: investments over the next four years are imperative if we are going to end the AIDS epidemic as a global health threat by 2030.

United States leadership and investments have saved the lives of tens of millions of men, women and children around the world. Reductions to the International Affairs budget would be deadly and only reverse the years of progress led by bi-partisan support in Congress.

We call on Congress once again to show the world that saving lives is not a partisan issue.

Protect the International Affairs Budget.
